

Patient stories

A North Tyneside patient has praised the care he received from his GP following a recent angina attack.

Eric Landau, a patient at the Wideopen Medical Practice, said: “I had to call the doctor to come and see me. Dr Liddle arrived; we’d met once before at the Patient Participation Group, she came in and addressed me by my name. She examined me, asked me questions and checked my medication. She went through the tablets I had been taking, some of them I’ve been taking for 30 odd years and they worked beautifully, but then they stopped working.

“So we doubled up. It didn’t work. So we doubled the dose again and that worked.

“But her whole general attitude. She listened; she was very kind and very courteous. After she left the house I said that was a breath of fresh air.”
